Just as imagemaking and storytelling are continuing to evolve, the International Center of Photography is entering a new era as the leading organization dedicated to photography and visual culture. ICP’s founder, Cornell Capa, described photography as “the most vital, effective, and universal means of communication of facts and ideas.” Today, we are exploring the vitality of photography and the power of the image in a time of significant change around the world. As we engage in dialogue about the way images are made and interpreted, ICP remains an important forum for provocative ideas, innovation, and debate.

This new era is marked by our recent move to our integrated center at Essex Crossing on the Lower East Side of Manhattan. For the first time in decades, our education programs and exhibitions are united to develop richer content and curriculum, unparalleled resources in a state-of-the-art production facility, and a dedicated library open to students and the public. We are continuing to maintain our collections at Mana Contemporary in Jersey City, New Jersey, and offer MFA studio space in Long Island City, Queens.

Our faculty and staff, known for integrating expertise, experience, and experimentation, continuously develop new approaches to learning and are creating inventive education programs that respect traditional photography while embracing the future of visual storytelling.

This is an exciting moment for all of us and I am honored to lead ICP into this new era. I’m also eager to get to know each of you and personally welcome you to ICP.

Mark Lubell
Executive Director

The International Center of Photography (ICP) is the world’s leading institution dedicated to photography and visual culture. Through our exhibitions, education programs, community outreach, and public events, we offer an open forum for dialogue about the role images play in our culture. Since our founding, we have presented more than 700 exhibitions and offered thousands of classes, providing instruction at every level.

Our new integrated center at Essex Crossing brings together imagemakers, artists, students, scholars, and photo enthusiasts to create and interpret the image. Here, our unique community is encouraged to explore photography and visual culture as mediums of empowerment and as catalysts for social change.

Our exhibition program welcomes more than 150,000 visitors each year. Through a traveling program, ICP exhibitions are seen around the world, reaching an audience of nearly one million viewers annually. Housed in a state-of-the-art facility, our permanent collection includes 150,000 original prints spanning the history of photography. Access to the Print Study Room is available to members, students, scholars, and others by appointment. ICP’s library contains approximately 20,000 books, more than 2,000 biographical files on photographers, and 50 periodical titles with 6,000 current and back issues of magazines and journals.

Among the world’s most extensive and best equipped, our education programs serve more than 3,500 students each year, providing instruction in a curriculum that ranges from digital media to darkroom classes. ICP also offers One-Year Certificate Programs and an MFA degree. Our substantive public programming features panels, lectures, symposia, workshops, performances, book discussions, and film screenings.
The International Center of Photography offers three One-Year Certificate Programs: Creative Practices, Documentary Practice and Visual Journalism, and New Media Narratives. These programs provide advanced students with an intensive yearlong course of study that strengthens personal vision, teaches professional practices, and explores the many disciplines that inform photography, media, and art today.

During the first term students are given assignments that challenge them to move out of their comfort zones and quickly acquire new skills and perspectives. In the second term, students are encouraged to create self-directed, more independent work. In the last term, students’ main projects culminate in a year-end exhibition and a day of portfolio reviews with leading professionals from a wide variety of publications, news outlets, and organizations. The programs conclude in a graduation celebration.

The Creative Practices program embraces a diverse range of photographic approaches for innovative expression in an atmosphere of cooperative learning. Students are not only encouraged to explore and define their own goals, but also challenged to situate their work within the broader context of the cultural, artistic, sociopolitical, and psychological use of images.

Featuring an accelerated investigation into the history of photography, contemporary theory, and craft, the curriculum also boasts a large selection of electives. Through these varied offerings, students can let their curiosity and passions lead them in new directions, ranging from nontraditional documentary narrative to experimental image production to other media, including video, sound, performance, and installation. By solidifying each student’s technical skills and broadening their vision, we build a foundation for ongoing, meaningful, and content-driven individual and collective practice.
Program Chair

Darin Mickey, chair of the Creative Practices program, is a New York–based photographer. He is the author of Death Takes a Holiday (J&L Books) and Stuff I Gotta Remember Not To Forget (J&L Books). His work has appeared in numerous publications, including Aperture, The New York Times Magazine, VICE, The Washington Post Magazine, I.D., FOAM, and Doubletake, among others. He has exhibited in both solo and group shows in New York, Los Angeles, Seattle, Detroit, Cleveland, Copenhagen, Sydney, and Tokyo, and his work is included in the collections of the Brooklyn Museum of Art, the Metropolitan Museum of Art (Watson Library Collection), the Museum of Modern Art (Library Collection), the Museum of the City of New York, Museo d’Arte Contemporanea di Roma, and others. Mickey has been teaching at ICP since 2001 and at the Cooper Union since 2004.

Documentary Practice and Visual Journalism

The Documentary Practice and Visual Journalism program focuses specifically on the investigative skills and technical knowledge necessary for students to advance in the complex and constantly changing world of visual storytelling. ICP’s long-standing commitment to documentary practice ensures that this program engages faculty whose members are among the foremost practitioners in the field today. Visiting photographers discuss best practices, methodologies, and innovative media, as well as political, ethical, and social concerns.

Our student-centered curriculum emphasizes class discussions and critiques in a supportive learning atmosphere. Participants explore the history of visual journalism; develop new and challenging technical skills in still photography, multimedia, and video; learn strategies for publication; and create long-term documentary projects that examine the human experience.
Program Chair

Karen Marshall, chair of the Documentary Practice and Visual Journalism program, is a documentary photographer whose work examines the psychological lives of her subjects within the social landscape. Her photographs have appeared in numerous publications, including The New York Times Magazine, the London Sunday Times, The Atlantic, New York Magazine, GUP Magazine, and PDN. She has exhibited widely in solo and group shows throughout the United States as well as in Germany, Austria, Canada, Israel, the Philippines, China, and Colombia. Marshall is the recipient of artist fellowships and sponsorships through the New York Foundation for the Arts, as well as grants and support from private foundations. Nominated for the Prix Pictet in 2011, her work is part of several collections, including the Feminist Art Base at the Brooklyn Museum. Marshall has been on the faculty at ICP for more than two decades, an associate professor (adjunct) at New York University, and guest faculty in the MFA program at the Maine Media College. She has also taught numerous workshops internationally that focus on visual storytelling.

The New Media Narratives program encourages photographers and artists to explore new strategies of imagemaking and visual storytelling made possible by technological change and informed by contemporary media, art, theory, criticism, and the broader culture. This interdisciplinary lens-based approach focuses on examining the innovative integration of a variety of media as a single, expanded field. The program allows for specialization in photography and/or emerging media, which, in addition to still photography, can include interactive, time-based, immersive, performance, and Internet work. Participants can also reimagine traditional practices, such as the photo essay and photobook, while encompassing a broader interpretation of personal practice.

Each student is encouraged to define their own creative objective and find their own unique practice. The program creates a space to delve deep and experiment. It is also designed to tap into the spirit of innovation emerging among documentarians and artists, as they explore new tools and possibilities for creating work and engaging audiences to tell personal and socially conscious stories.

Elizabeth Kilroy is the founding chair of the New Media Narratives program. Students in her first graduating class collaborated with Mark Ghuneim and Charlotte Cotton in the realization of real-time media streams in ICP’s exhibition Public, Private, Secret in 2016. Her related essay on other issues within the field of new media storytelling can be found in Cotton’s eponymous book referencing the exhibition, published by Aperture. This pioneering class also ran ICP’s first-ever visual hackathon, Hack the Photo, a two-day event that drew 90 photographers and storytellers. An award-winning visual storyteller, designer, and creative technologist, Kilroy has been immersed in digital storytelling and photography for many years, creating engaging content that harnesses the ever-changing possibilities of the internet. She investigates ideas and work that fuse visual storytelling, design, technology, and emergent practices to disseminate nonfiction narratives, and often speaks at conferences and events. Kilroy has been an adjunct teacher at New York University’s Tisch School of the Arts, Temple University, Baruch College, the School of Visual Arts, and NYU’s Interactive Telecommunications Program (ITP). She taught in the NYU–Magnum Foundation summer program for four years with Fred Ritchin and Susan Meiselas. A graduate of UDC Dublin, she read English and philosophy, and attended NCAD Dublin, where she studied visual language and design. She holds a graduate degree from NYU’s ITP.
