International Center of Photography Moves to New Sites to Expand Programs and Activities

New York, NY (March 13, 2014) – The International Center of Photography issues the following statement regarding plans for new sites in 2015:

The International Center of Photography has chosen to move from our current museum site in January 2015 in order to develop a space that reflects our vision and the explosive growth of visual communications.

Our founder, Cornell Capa, saw ICP as being at the forefront of conversations about the role of images in our society and we remain at the center of these conversations nationally and internationally.

Our executive director Mark Lubell says:

“When I joined ICP, one of the exciting opportunities was to be able to move from our current location and develop spaces that enable us to expand and provide new experiences in new mediums. These spaces will be reflective of our programmatic plans and activities. I look forward to announcing the future sites this spring.”

The school will remain at 1114 Avenue of the Americas in Midtown, Manhattan.

About ICP

The International Center of Photography (ICP) is the world’s leading institution dedicated to the practice and understanding of photography and the reproduced image in all its forms. Through our exhibitions, educational programs, and community outreach, we offer an open forum for dialogue about the role images play in our culture. Since our founding, we have presented more than 500 exhibitions and offered thousands of classes, providing instruction at every level. ICP is a center where photographers and artists, students and scholars can create and interpret the world of the image within our comprehensive educational facilities and archive.
